That First Light

COOPERATIVE ELECTRICITY, which today serves more than 3 million Texans, got its start 90 years ago this month at a farmhouse outside Bartlett.

After paying a $5 deposit for an electric meter, Charles Saage yanked a string and turned on a light bulb March 7, 1936. That made Bartlett Electric Cooperative in Central Texas the first to bring Rural Electrification Administration-funded power to rural America.

Today, 77 electric co-ops serve Texans, and nationwide, nearly 900 serve 42 million Americans.

The Saage farmhouse near Bartlett made electric cooperative history in 1936.

A Bat's Buffet

At least a dozen bat-viewing sites in Texas allow for watching the mammals emerge for a night of dining on insects.

But some bats eat so much more than bugs. Bat Conservation International, based in Austin, notes their diets can include birds, fish, frogs, leaves, nectar, scorpions, sea lion blood and even other bats.

CHARTED WATERS

Dozens of invisible trails lead kayakers and canoers through scenic waterways

I'VE PADDLED my yellow plastic kayak deep into a maze of lime-colored reeds along the edge of Powderhorn Lake, a shallow estuary off Matagorda Bay on the Texas coast.

Around me, marble-sized snails shimmy up slender blades of seagrass. Somewhere out of sight, a great blue heron squawks like a kid in a playground squabble. Pelicans flap overhead, and mullet splash at the water's surface.

I've come here to explore a new paddling trail that opened in 2025—one of 90 waterway trails totaling more than 700 miles that now wind through rivers, lakes and shorelines across the state.

Unlike terrestrial trails, which unfurl along visible dirt or gravel paths, these trails are harder to see. But the watery routes offer a new perspective on some of the state's most beautiful places.

Texas State Parks officials designated a few paddling trails along the coast as one-off projects starting in 1999, hoping to help anglers find their way around marshy bays and lagoons. Soon, other communities near waterways started calling to see if they could get a trail, too.

In 2006, the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department teamed up with the city of Luling to open its first inland paddling trail—a 6-mile stretch of the San Marcos River between U.S. Highway 90 and State Highway 80. That marked the official launch of the state's paddling trail program, which celebrates its 20th anniversary this year.

“We really wanted to take some of the mystery out of paddling and partner with communities to improve access,” says Shelly Plante, nature tourism manager for TPWD.

It doesn’t cost much to get into paddling. Outdoors stores sell basic kayaks for less than $200, but if you don’t want to buy a boat, small businesses around the state rent them by the hour or day.

Paddlers can check the TPWD website for maps and descriptions of trails. The site includes information on how long it’ll take to paddle each route, plus details about where to put in and take out. An information kiosk is posted at each trailhead, and some of the trickier-to-navigate routes are marked with signs or buoys.

The trails themselves are as varied as the state’s landscape.

“You have the trails in the Mission Reach in San Antonio that have chutes, then you have the Upper Guadalupe River, with its stone river bottom, riffles and rapids,” Plante says. “That’s totally different than the slow-moving Lower Guadalupe. Then there’s Caddo Lake—a mysterious, Spanish-mossy, swampy area that looks otherworldly.”

Author Pam LeBlanc and Jimmy Harvey navigate the reeds of Powderhorn Lake, site of some of the state’s newest paddling trails.

The Powderhorn Paddling Trails were officially unveiled in April 2025. The trails' collective 32 miles are split into four routes—Boggy Bayou Trail, Matagorda Bay Shoreline Trail, Coloma Creek Trail and Powderhorn Lake Loop Trail.

My friends and I opted for the lake loop. We started by slathering on sunscreen and topping off our water containers, then shoved off from Powderhorn RV Park, one of four designated put-in points.

We glided past a row of seagulls perched on wooden posts, then paddled into the lake, which measures just 2–5 feet deep in most places. The lake is popular with anglers who come to catch redfish and trout, and minutes after my friend Jimmy Harvey cast his rod, he reeled in a speckled trout.

We meandered along the shoreline for a while, then crossed to the opposite side of the lake, near the future site of Powderhorn State Park. From there we skipped down the shoreline, passing a few old earthen jetties left over from when this land was an operating ranch, then scudded along a muddy shoreline.

When we turned into a lush, grassy inlet, we found the real magic: narrow channels and reeds over our heads. Four and a half hours after we started, we turned back to the RV park, working hard against the wind.

If you're looking for a more protected route, consider the 5.4-mile Boggy Bayou option, where you might see roseate spoonbills and ospreys, or the Coloma Creek Trail, which starts at the west end of the lake.

The next day, we came back for more.

SIT THE TRAILS

Texas Parks and Wildlife's paddling trails program includes 90 routes across the state's 3,700 named streams, 15 major rivers and 3,300 miles of tidal shoreline. Here are a few of Pam's favorites.

Caddo Lake: Ten separate paddling trails covering a total of 50 miles twist through primordial-feeling swamps, sloughs and bayous where bullfrogs croak and bald cypress wear beards of Spanish moss. Watch for beavers, owls, turtles and the occasional alligator as you follow color-coded signs that mark the trails.

Guadalupe/San Marcos rivers: The Guadalupe runs cool and clear through Central Texas on its way to the coast. Choose between trails above Canyon Lake, where the river cuts beneath remote limestone cliffs, or sections farther downstream, like the family-friendly Luling Zedler Mill Trail, the Come and Take It Trail near Gonzales or the Guadalupe Valley Trail through Cuero.

Inks Lake Paddling Trails: At Inks Lake in Central Texas, paddle among granite outcroppings on a constant-level lake. Three trails, including one that takes you to the Devil's Waterhole at Inks Lake State Park, vary in length from 1 to 3.4 miles. Canoe and kayak rentals are available at the state park headquarters.

Lady Bird Lake Paddling Trail: Kayak or canoe up to 11 miles on this urban paddling trail, which delivers views of Austin's ever-growing skyline. As a bonus on summer nights, watch the city's population of Mexican free-tailed bats emerge from beneath the Ann W. Richards Congress Avenue Bridge.

Lighthouse Lakes Paddling Trail: This was the state's first official paddling trail, mapped in 1999 near Port Aransas. Four loops—nearly 20 miles in all—weave through black mangroves and seagrass flats around Lydia Ann Lighthouse on North Harbor Island. State parks officials say the lighthouse's old Fresnel lens is still submerged somewhere in the muck.

Toledo Bend Reservoir: Four new trails, for a collective 30 miles, opened in late August 2025 at the reservoir, which is on the Texas-Louisiana border and is the official bass fishing capital of Texas.

Unlike our first outing, when the wind had ruffled the water like batter in a mixing bowl on high speed, the lake looked like glass. A dolphin breached the silvery surface as we headed to the same thicket of seagrasses we'd found earlier.

This time we ducked even farther into the maze, until grasses brushed against both sides of my kayak, and I wondered if I would come face to face with a toothy alligator around a bend. (I didn't, thankfully.)

I've paddled rivers around the state—including the Devils, Pecos, Guadalupe and San Marcos—but this salty oasis looks and feels entirely different. And now that I've explored Powderhorn Lake, I'm eager to check out more trails, including the new route that opened recently on Greens Bayou in northeast Houston.

Besides making it easier for paddlers to discover natural areas in a state that's largely privately owned, the paddling trails have shown communities that the water in their backyards can bring in tourism dollars.

"What the paddling trails do is give people access or ideas of places to go," Harvey said. "And for me, a day on the water with my friends is better than a day anywhere else." ■

DON'T FIND YOURSELF UP A CREEK

Stay safe with these tips.

- Always pack a personal flotation device, as required by Texas law.
- Check the weather forecast and river flow rates before you go.
- Don't paddle alone, and tell someone where you're going.
- Watch for logjams and debris, especially after storms. You may need to portage around obstacles.
- Drink plenty of water.
- Wear sunscreen and bring insect repellent.
- Leave no trace.
- Carry a whistle for emergencies.
- Use a light after dark or in reduced visibility conditions, like fog.
- Carry a map and cellphone in a dry bag.
- Give anglers a wide berth.
- Wear bright colors during hunting season.
- Watch for powerboats, and don't stop in high-traffic areas.
- Don't trespass on private property.
- Don't harass the wildlife.

Mason rallies to preserve and restore ornate historical gems of the Hill Country

It's the first Saturday of the month, and visitors have arrived to tour the three-story Seaquist House in Mason. Adorned with pillars, gables, balconies, a tower and turret, and four chimneys, the sandstone mansion graces Broad Street.

Three blocks south, on the town square, stands the Mason County Courthouse, also built of sandstone. With massive white columns on all four sides, it's crowned with a domed clock tower.

Both historical landmarks were nearly lost, one to neglect and the other to fire. But with small-town resiliency, Mason residents pulled together to save their architectural heritage through two projects that required enormous helpings of time and funding.

On the Seaquist's front porch this morning, a docent welcomes everyone with a brief history of the 1887 Victorian Italianate home. Another volunteer on hand is Jan Appleby, a retired teacher who spearheaded efforts to rescue the Seaquist.

"It was up to us to save this house," she says. "Nobody had lived in it for seven years. You couldn't see the front of the house because of all the ligustrums. There were broken windows and screens. The inside was in bad shape with no electricity or running water. Plaster was falling from the walls, and the smell was horrific."

In Good Hands

For a time, the future appeared bleak for the abandoned house, a social hot spot in its heyday. Historical records show that master stonemason and minister Thomas Broad bought the land in June 1886 and soon thereafter started building a two-story stone residence with a massive basement. In 1891, banker Edward Reynolds bought the unfinished house and hired German architect Richard Grosse to add a third floor with a ballroom as well as wraparound porches and balconies.

In 1899, Reynolds went to prison for embezzlement and never returned to Mason. His wife, Jennie, and their children lived in the house until 1919 when she sold it to bootmaker Oscar Seaquist. The home remained in his family for two more generations. In 1974, it was awarded a Texas Historical Marker and placed on the National Register of Historic Places. Unable to maintain the house, the family moved out in 2005. Seven years later, the property went up for sale.

Soon, Appleby—chair of the Mason County Historical Commission at the time—started a campaign to save it.

Rescue efforts gained traction when Preservation Texas, a nonprofit organization dedicated to protecting historic landmarks from demolition, placed the Seaquist on its Most Endangered Places List in 2014. The publicity spurred formation of the nonprofit Seaquist House Foundation, which purchased the home in January 2015 for $400,000. Enough was raised to pay off the note by October 2017.

Since then, countless supporters have donated labor and thousands of dollars to restore the Seaquist's interior, richly accented in walnut: doors, staircases, window frames and shutters, beadboard walls and ceilings, and railings and newel posts. Volunteers pulled down wallpaper, pulled up carpeting, scraped away plaster, replaced electrical wiring and plumbing, painted walls, and refinished long-leaf pine floors and other woodwork, to name only a fraction of the fixes.

When built 139 years ago, immigrant masons using primitive tools crafted ornate details throughout the Seaquist, which boasts 22 rooms and 15 fireplaces. On exterior walls, hand-carved floral motifs and other patterns embellish limestone blocks. A bathroom wall features a panel of S-curved wainscoting fashioned from walnut.

The spacious third-floor ballroom draws the most gasps. Dark walnut panels stretch across towering walls and vaulted ceilings hung with chandeliers. Behind a paneled door, narrow stairs lead to a small balcony, which overlooks the dance floor and once held musicians who performed for social gatherings. In other panel-encased rooms, guests played cards and billiards while waiters served libations from the bar.

Festive occasions have since returned to the Seaquist, which can be rented for weddings, receptions and other events. In the meantime, renovations continue. One last major project will focus on repairing and repainting the home's exterior.

From the Ashes

For his part, volunteer Jerry Bearden, a Central Texas Electric Cooperative member, serves as president of the Seaquist House Foundation. He was also heavily involved in restoring the 1910 Classical Revival courthouse. The Mason County judge for 20 years before he retired in 2022, Bearden was there the awful night of February 4, 2021, soon after an arsonist torched the building.

Within minutes, the roof and clock tower collapsed. On the lawn, Bearden dropped to his knees as the ceiling above his first-floor office caved in and engulfed his desk.

"The heat was so intense that it cracked sandstone blocks made by the original artisans," Bearden says. "A piece of metal bent by the heat is displayed at our city library."

Law officials apprehended Nicholas Miller of Mason the next day and charged him with two felony counts of arson. In February 2024, he was found guilty and given two 75-year prison sentences for burning the courthouse and a family home.

Amid the ashes, some good news bolstered spirits. For one thing, county records had been moved out in preparation for interior renovations funded by the Texas Historic Courthouse Preservation Program. Then engineers who examined the building's four exterior sandstone walls and 16 columns declared them structurally sound for use in rebuilding the courthouse. After crews worked a month to

TAKE A GANDER

Public tours of the Seaquist House are led the first Saturday of each month, 10 a.m.–1:30 p.m. Admission is $15 for adults. Mail donations to Seaquist House Foundation, P.O. Box 1496, Mason, TX 76856.

The Mason County Courthouse is open 8 a.m.–4 p.m. Monday–Friday.

remove truckloads of charred debris, recovery began.

But to rebuild, Mason County faced a price tag of nearly $20 million. Toward that goal, $3.6 million still remained from the original state grant. Friends of the Mason County Courthouse raised $5.5 million. The Texas Association of Counties awarded $7 million in insurance money, and the Legislature approved $6 million toward the project.

“We came up with enough money to rebuild this courthouse,” Bearden says. “It didn’t cost taxpayers a dime.” Remaining funds were placed in a foundation to fund future courthouse maintenance.

As project manager, CPM Texas of Austin drew from historical records and paint scrapings taken prior to the fire to restore the courthouse to its 1910 appearance.

Corridors display floors of red-stained cement and original square white tiles, many of which bear singe marks from the blaze. Eight metal fireplaces, once used to heat rooms, are painted in original colors, such as golden yellow, emerald green and burgundy red. Seven heavy vault doors gleam with black paint and gold etchings of filigrees and maker name Diebold Safe & Locks Co.

Throughout the courthouse, destroyed furnishings, such as the original district judge’s bench, courtroom pews, jury box and witness stand, were replaced with historical replicas. So, too, was the domed clock tower. The new cupola—made of sheet metal that took thousands of hours to fabricate—houses an electronic clock and chimes, modern versions of the old iron bell and clock mechanism that were gutted by the fire.

Three years after that fire, the Mason County Courthouse reopened for business. On July 13, 2024, more than 750 people applauded and cheered when Bearden, standing on the courthouse steps with other dignitaries, cut a red ribbon during a rededication ceremony. Just as Bearden had publicly vowed, their courthouse phoenix had risen from ashes.

Three blocks away, the Seaquist House had survived near ruin too.

“Politics and religion can divide people,” Appleby says. “But they’ll come together for something important like the Seaquist House and the courthouse. And that’s amazing.” ■

Grid Investments Pay Off Down the Line

AS YOUR LOCAL power provider, Fannin Electric Cooperative’s mission has always been simple: keep the lights on and support the communities we serve. But behind every switch, warm home and business that opens its doors is a complex system that needs constant care.

Reliable electricity doesn’t happen by accident. It requires ongoing investment in our local grid—through system repairs, maintenance, upgrades and the integration of new technologies that help us operate smarter and more efficiently.

Much of the energy system we rely on today was built decades ago. While it continues to serve us well, age alone means that components must be repaired or replaced to maintain performance and safety. From poles and wires to transformers and substations, every part of the grid has a lifespan.

appliances and new commercial facilities add load to the local distribution system. As these technologies take hold, the grid must be able to support increased demand while maintaining the reliability our members expect. Strategic upgrades are essential to ensure we can meet these needs today and in the decades ahead.

At the same time, new tools and technologies are improving our processes. Smart meters and advanced monitoring systems allow us to detect problems more quickly and respond more effectively. These technologies can isolate problems, reroute power to minimize outages and provide real-time data that helps us plan and maintain equipment more efficiently.

Implementing innovative technologies is not just a convenience—it’s a necessity for ensuring reliability in an increasingly complex energy landscape.

While these improvements require thoughtful planning and financial investment, the return is significant. A stronger grid supports economic growth, improves service quality, and enhances safety for our crews and community. Most importantly, it ensures that the essential power you rely on is available whenever you need it.

Our commitment to reliability runs deeper than infrastructure alone. It reflects our responsibility to the people and communities we serve. Every upgrade, every repair and every technology we deploy is an investment in your daily life—from the comfort of your home to the success of local businesses and schools.

We know that powering our community means preparing for the future—not just maintaining the present. By investing in our local grid today, we’re building the foundation for a brighter and more resilient tomorrow. ■

RYANLANE | ISTOCK.COM

Routine maintenance helps extend that lifespan, but eventually equipment must be updated to meet modern standards. These proactive investments reduce the likelihood of outages, shorten restoration times when disruptions do occur and create a stronger backbone for our growing community.

The demands on the electric grid are also evolving. Homes and businesses today use more electricity than ever, and that trend will only continue. Electric vehicles, advanced HVAC systems, smart

Family Shares Tragedy To Raise Awareness

THE PARENTS OF a man who was electrocuted at work volunteered to share the circumstances of their son's passing with Electrical Safety Foundation International. They, along with Fannin Electric Cooperative, hope to raise awareness of the risks of working with or around electricity.

“Two years ago, our son left for work and never returned home,” the family shared in a statement. “He was electrocuted while working off-site to remove computer equipment that his employer had purchased. According to the incident report issued by (the Occupational Safety and Health Administration), he was standing on a 6-foot stepladder, preparing a telecommunications relay assembly for demolition by cutting a bundle of network cables leading into the relay. Contact with a lighting circuit, which had not been shut off, caused the fatal injury.

“OSHA cited his employer, having found that ‘employees were not trained to recognize electrical hazards, safety-related work practices were not employed to prevent electric shock, and electrical test equipment was not used to determine if circuits were de-energized prior to work on or near the equipment.’

“He had a lot on his mind that day. Their beloved dog had died the night before. His wife begged him not to go in, but everyone was depending on him to get the job done, and he didn't want to let his employer down. These factors—an employer who did not prioritize safety, grief and exhaustion—led to that one moment when he reached for those wires and ended his life.

“Our family is devastated by this loss, both for ourselves and our son, who had so many hopes and dreams for the future that will now go unrealized.

“Please stay vigilant and follow all safety protocols. Never let routine breed complacency or allow pressure from your peers or employer to compel you to perform tasks for which you have not received adequate safety training. Protect yourself—not just for your sake, but for those who love and depend on you.”

At Fannin EC, we urge our members to work safely around electricity at home and work every day. We make safety the highest priority in our workplace with the hopes of keeping our members and employees safe. ■

Capital Improvements

The Brazos River birthplace of Texas has never beckoned more in its 190 years

BY SAMANTHA BRYANT • PHOTOS BY TIFFANY HOFELDT

IT'S NOT EVERY DAY that a ghost town comes back to life. But that's what's happening in Washington, a town along the Brazos River resurrected so visitors can experience a linchpin in Texas' history.

Touted as the birthplace of Texas, it was here that delegates signed the declaration of independence, 190 years ago March 2, that created the Republic of Texas. It was also here, in one of the short-lived nation's interim capitals, that the Texas Congress voted for annexation by the U.S. in 1845.

"We are the place where Texas became Texas," said Jonathan Failor, director of the Washington-on-the-Brazos State Historic Site, "where people came together and stood against a tyrannical dictator and set their sights on something greater, something better, and eventually joined the United States 10 years later."

Those two historic decisions took place in buildings that sat roughly 300 feet apart, but over the course of decades, those buildings—along with the rest of the original town—south of College Station, disappeared into farmland after locals bet on steamboat trade and let the railroad bypass them.

"The affluence went to the railroad towns like Brenham and Navasota," said Michael Moore, project manager for the historic townsite. "The brick buildings here were sometimes dismantled and the bricks moved to Navasota to build a new building. Washington was left forgotten and kind of vanished into the landscape."

It became a park and historic site in 1916, and a replica building of Independence Hall, where the 59 delegates met, was constructed in the 1920s and rebuilt in 1969.

"That for the longest time was the only thing out here," Failor said. "This was one building that told the story of Texas independence in a town of which there was at one time 1,000 people."

But now people are once again strolling down Main, Austin and Ferry streets beneath the shade of pecan and live oak trees, meandering in and out of a drugstore, an apothecary shop, Sam Houston's presidential office and a blacksmith shop thanks to a $57 million renovation project, mostly funded by the state. Ten replica structures dot the original townsite, which reopened in November after two years of extensive archaeological exploration, construction and renovations.

Moore and his team researched and re-created buildings as near to their original locations as possible while balancing the preservation of ruins.

Inside Hatfield's Exchange, visitors can walk past a bar and upstairs to where the Texas Congress met while Washington was the capital, 1842–45. They can stop at a carpentry shop, watch demonstrations and hear the stories of the delegates who lodged there during the 1836 convention. For children, the townsite offers an immersive experience.

"They come and have fun, but also they can connect something visual, something tangible, to what they're learning in school," Moore said.

The visitors center and Star of the Republic Museum located on the same nearly 300-acre property managed by the Texas Historical Commission were also updated. The star-shaped museum, originally opened in 1970, underwent upgrades in technology and accessibility. Its six galleries contain artifacts, films and exhibits that walk visitors through the story of Texas, from its pre-Republic era through annexation and beyond.

The complex includes Barrington Living History Farm, which was the homestead of Dr. Anson Jones, who was the last president of Texas. Hall and Lott Tavern, the newest replica building, opens this spring. Davy Crockett spent the night here on his way to the Alamo, a place that every Texas schoolchild is admonished to remember.

Improvements to Washington are meant to leave a lasting impression as well.

"We know Texas existed as its own country," Failor said. "It's a point of pride, it's something that Texans know and non-Texans know. But where can Texans who've been here for seven, eight, nine generations and folks who have just got here, where can they go get that story? We want that to be here." ■

Urgent: Special Summer Driving Notice

To some, sunglasses are a fashion accessory...

But When Driving, These Sunglasses May Save Your Life!

Drivers' Alert: Driving can expose you to more dangerous glare than any sunny day at the beach can... do you know how to protect yourself?

The sun rises and sets at peak travel periods, during the early morning and afternoon rush hours and many drivers find themselves temporarily blinded while driving directly into the glare of the sun. Deadly accidents are regularly caused by such blinding glare with danger arising from reflected light off another vehicle, the pavement, or even from waxed and oily windshields that can make matters worse. Early morning dew can exacerbate this situation. Yet, motorists struggle on despite being blinded by the sun's glare that can cause countless accidents every year.

Not all sunglasses are created equal. Protecting your eyes is serious business. With all the fancy fashion frames out there it can be easy to overlook what really matters—the lenses. So we did our research and looked to the very best in optic innovation and technology.

Sometimes it does take a rocket scientist. A NASA rocket scientist. Some ordinary sunglasses can obscure your vision by exposing your eyes to harmful UV rays, blue light, and reflective glare. They can also darken useful vision-enhancing light. But now, independent research conducted by scientists from NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory has brought forth ground-breaking technology to help protect human eyesight from the harmful effects of solar radiation light. This superior lens technology was first discovered when NASA scientists looked to nature for a means to superior eye protection—specifically, by studying the eyes of eagles, known for their extreme visual acuity. This discovery resulted in what is now known as Eagle Eyes®.

The Only Sunglass Technology Certified by the Space Foundation for UV and Blue-Light Eye Protection. Eagle Eyes® features the most advanced eye protection technology ever created. The TriLenium® Lens Technology offers triple-filter polarization to block 99.9% UVA and UVB—plus the added benefit of blue-light eye protection. Eagle Eyes® is the only optic technology that has earned official recognition from the Space Certification Program for this remarkable technology. Now, that's proven science-based protection.

The finest optics: And buy one, get one FREE! Eagle Eyes® has the highest customer satisfaction of any item in our 20 year history. We are so excited for you to try the Eagle Eyes® breakthrough technology that we will give you a second pair of Eagle Eyes® Navigator™ Sunglasses FREE—a $59.95 value!

That's two pairs to protect your eyes with the best technology available for less than the price of one pair of traditional sunglasses. You get a pair of Navigators with stainless steel black frames and the other with stainless steel gold, plus one hard zipper case and one micro-fiber drawstring cleaning pouch are included. Keep one pair in your pocket and one in your car.

Your satisfaction is 100% guaranteed. If you are not astounded with the Eagle Eyes® technology, enjoying clearer, sharper and more glare-free vision, simply return one pair within 30 days for a full refund of the purchase price. The other pair is yours to keep. No one else has such confidence in their optic technology. Don't leave your eyes in the hands of fashion designers, entrust them to the best scientific minds on earth. Wear your Eagle Eyes® Navigators with absolute confidence, knowing your eyes are protected with technology that was born in space for the human race.

Studies by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) show that most (74%) of the crashes occurred on clear, sunny days

A Tidy Revolution

Litterbugs were put on notice 40 years ago with four iconic words

BY BOB MCCULLOUGH • ILLUSTRATION BY RYAN OLBRYSH

LIKE A LOT of kids, Tim McClure received regular reminders from his mom to clean his bedroom. The advertising executive, who grew up in Corsicana and now lives in Austin, vividly recalled those admonitions in 1985 when he developed one of the most memorable taglines of all time: “Don’t mess with Texas.”

The award-winning ad campaign urging careless folks to stop littering on Texas highways just marked its 40th anniversary. Its iconic slogan dawned on McClure during an early-morning stroll when he observed roadside refuse in his neighborhood that made him think of his messy room.

“‘Don’t mess with Texas’ was a battle cry that reached into the DNA of all Texans,” McClure says, “reminding them that they take great pride in their state. Litter is the antithesis of that sense of pride. Once reminded, Texans did what Texans do—we changed our behavior to reflect our commitment.”

“Don’t mess” enjoyed overnight success thanks to bumper stickers followed by a slew of TV spots starring Texan celebrities eager to enlist in the battle against litter.

In December 1985, stickers with just those four iconic words and a small Texas flag mysteriously appeared on pickup trucks across the Lone Star State. The stickers targeted a key demographic: young Texan men accustomed to jettisoning trash out of their pickups instead of stashing it in proper receptacles.

Then on New Year’s Day 1986, in a TV spot that resembled a music video that aired during the Cotton Bowl, blues guitarist Stevie Ray Vaughan played a rousing rendition of The Eyes of Texas, then punctuated it with those simple but powerful words: “Don’t mess with Texas.”

Almost immediately, viewers called their local stations wanting more.

That was the beginning of dozens of “Don’t mess” messages. “I’m very proud of them all, but the first, featuring Stevie Ray Vaughan, is my sentimental favorite,” says McClure, the M in GSD&M, the Austin powerhouse ad agency that led the campaign.

Other notable Texans who appeared in “Don’t mess” commercials included Johnny Dee and the Rocket 88’s, Dallas Cowboys Randy White and Ed “Too Tall” Jones, the Fabulous Thunderbirds, Little Joe y La Familia, Willie Nelson, and the Texas Tornados. An animated spot starring SeaWorld orca Shamu and three penguin sidekicks—the Texas Tuxedos—urged kids not to litter.

Today, the Texas Department of Transportation carries on “Don’t mess,” with downloadable activity books for kids at dontmesswithtexas.org, lesson plans for teachers and scholarships for students who take on environmental projects.

“Litter on Texas roads was reduced by 63% from 2013 to 2023,” says Marc D. Williams, TxDOT executive director. “This shows our messaging is working, especially as the population grows. But we still have work to do. More than 360 million pieces of litter accumulate on Texas roads every year, with cigarette butts and beverage containers among the most common items.”

McClure believes Texas pride continues to be at the heart of the four-decade success of “Don’t mess.”

“We Texans are a proud bunch,” he says. “Proud of our state. Proud of our colorful past. Excited about the future ahead of us. Some things you simply don’t mess with!” ■

Barbecue Sides

Meet the dishes that dazzle when the smoke clears

BY VIANNEY RODRIGUEZ, FOOD EDITOR

As a newlywed I brought a version of this recipe to my in-laws' barbecue. My mother-in-law instantly fell in love with it. She asked for the recipe and proceeded to tweak, tweak and tweak until it became her recipe, a tradition at every barbecue. We still make it in her honor. We miss you, Grandma.

Grandma's Creamy Cucumber Salad

¼ cup lemon juice
2 teaspoons sugar
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup sour cream
¼ cup fresh dill, finely chopped, divided use
2 large cucumbers, thinly sliced
½ red onion, thinly sliced

1. In a large bowl, stir together lemon juice and sugar until sugar dissolves.
2. Add salt, sour cream and all but 1 teaspoon dill. Stir to combine.
3. Gently stir in cucumbers and red onion. Refrigerate at least 1 hour.
4. Stir before serving and top with remaining dill.

Pickled Coleslaw

TRI-COUNTY EC

Coleslaw is the ultimate barbecue side dish that just keeps giving. Its tang cuts through the richness of the meat, and it's even better the next day piled high on a sandwich. I appreciated the ease of this recipe, which delivered crunch and bold flavor.

- 1 medium head cabbage, shredded
- 1 small red onion, thinly sliced
- 2 medium carrots, shredded
- 1 tablespoon sugar
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon dry mustard
- ½ teaspoon celery seed
- ½ cup olive oil
- ½ cup apple cider vinegar

1. In a large bowl, combine cabbage, red onion and carrots.
2. In a saucepan, bring sugar, salt, dry mustard, celery seed, oil and vinegar to a boil, stirring to dissolve sugar.
3. Pour vinegar mixture over cabbage mixture and combine well. Allow to cool.
4. Cover and refrigerate at least 4 hours before serving.

If there's pasta salad at the barbecue, find me there. I love a great pasta salad loaded with crunch, bite, saltiness and cheese. Ussery's salad has a bit of tang to it, which I really enjoyed, and it's loaded with color and flavor.

- 16 ounces veggie rotini
- 6 ounces colby jack cheese, cubed
- ½ cup diced red onion
- ¾ cup diced celery
- ½ cup diced red bell pepper
- 1 cup frozen peas
- ½ cup mayonnaise
- ¼ cup apple cider vinegar
- ¼ cup fresh dill, finely chopped,
or 2 tablespoons dried dill weed
- 2 tablespoons sugar
- 2 tablespoons Dijon mustard
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1 teaspoon ground black pepper

1. Cook pasta according to package directions, drain well and place in a large bowl to cool.
2. Once pasta has cooled, stir in cheese, onion, celery, bell pepper and peas.
3. In a small bowl, whisk together mayonnaise, vinegar, dill, sugar, mustard, salt and pepper.
4. Add mayonnaise mixture to pasta and stir to coat. Refrigerate at least 1 hour before serving.

Cauliflower and Green Beans

SOUAD EL ALAMI
FARMERS EC

On a table full of barbecue, potato salad, and mac and cheese, a simple vegetable dish shouldn't be an afterthought. El Alami's dish is a delight. The pop of freshness from the parsley, cilantro and lemon juice makes a truly spectacular side dish for chicken or beef.

- 1 large head cauliflower
- 1 pound green beans
- 4 cups water
- 1¼ tablespoons salt, divided use
- 6 cloves garlic, not peeled
- 4 tablespoons (½ stick) unsalted butter
- 2 tablespoons olive oil
- ¼ teaspoon ground black pepper
- 1 tablespoon chopped fresh parsley
- 1 tablespoon chopped cilantro
- ½ tablespoon lemon juice

- 1. Slice cauliflower into quarters. Use your hands or a knife to remove florets from core. Cut florets as needed to create uniform pieces.
- 2. Trim the ends of green beans and discard. Slice beans in half.
- 3. In a large pot, bring water and 1 tablespoon salt to a boil. Add green beans, reduce heat to medium, and cook 5–8 minutes or until tender. Remove green beans from pot and place into an ice bath for 20 minutes. Drain.

- 4. Steam cauliflower and garlic cloves in a steamer until tender, about 8–10 minutes. Allow to cool.
- 5. Heat butter and oil in a skillet over medium-high heat. Squeeze garlic out of peel into skillet and cook 40 seconds, stirring. Stir in green beans and cook an additional minute.
- 6. Add cauliflower and stir to incorporate. Stir in remaining ¼ tablespoon salt, pepper, parsley and cilantro. Cook an additional minute. Remove from heat and stir in lemon juice.

COURTESY CHET GARNER

Long Drives in Big Bend

Live the luxe life in a surprising locale: Lajitas

BY CHET GARNER

THERE'S OFF THE BEATEN PATH and then there's Lajitas—a spot so remote that it feels like you've driven off the edge of the map. But just when you're sure you've missed civilization completely, the desert opens up to reveal a high-end resort with golf carts, spa robes and a goat that drinks beer. Welcome to the most luxurious ghost town in Texas.

The legend of Lajitas begins with the land itself—a sunbaked stretch of the Chihuahuan Desert along the Rio Grande sandwiched between Big Bend National Park and Big Bend Ranch State Park.

The town was once known for bandits, miners and cattle drives, but today it's most famous for its unusual mayor. His name's Clay Henry IV, and he's a goat whose claim to fame is guzzling beer straight from the bottle like his father and his father and his father before that. He's the world's most carefree politician, doing his civic duty one gulp at a time.

The only thing more unexpected than the goat in charge is the Lajitas Golf Resort, a desert oasis that feels wildly out of place and yet somehow perfect. Its crown jewel is Black Jack's Crossing, a golf course named for U.S. Army Gen. John J. "Black Jack" Pershing, who pursued Pancho Villa across the Rio Grande in 1916. There's even a hole where players can see how far they can smack a ball across the river into Mexico.

As the day faded away, I settled into my dinner on the resort's terrace. The mesquite-grilled rib eye and the smell of creosote in the air were only upstaged by the sun setting behind distant mountains like a slow-burning ember. Out here, fine dining and frontier grit somehow share the same table, and I was happy to be their dinner guest. ■

ABOVE Chet finds that golf is just part of the Chihuahuan Desert oasis experience that is the town of Lajitas.

TCP Watch the video on our website and see all of Chet's Texplorations on The Daytripper on PBS.

Nature Nurtures— And It Buzzes

Embrace the bugs in your yard and watch them work their magic

BY JENNIFER DANNY
ILLUSTRATION BY HEIDI SCHMIDT

THE FIRST TIME I learned about cicadas, I was visiting family in North Texas. As I was getting my luggage out of the car, I heard rustling and buzzing in the trees. I asked my daughter what that noise was.

Somewhat concerned, I said, “Do they sting?”

“I’m not sure,” she said. “You probably won’t even get to see them, but you’ll hear them.”

And hear them I did. I was fascinated by these creatures, and I started to research everything I could about them.

You see, I have a history with life’s littlest creatures. For the past few years, I’ve planted milkweed for monarch butterflies, and each summer, I had the pleasure of watching them lay their eggs that then turned into caterpillars, which built cocoons and eventually emerged as butterflies.

There is something so beautiful about monarchs, the way they flap their wings as if to thank you for providing a home and milkweed before they begin their migration.

I also would buy praying mantis eggs from the local gardening store. When they hatched, I would disperse them throughout my yard. They’re very tiny when they first come out of the egg, and often I would see a few grow to maturity. I find their praying hands to be a symbol of hope and happiness.

Ah, but it doesn’t stop there. One day I saw a carpenter bee near a little wood sculpture in my yard. I watched it go inside through a tiny hole. And it turns out for many years, the carpenter bees and their next generation lived inside the sculpture. They had quite a distinctive buzz, much louder than the honeybees that would visit and pollinate my flowers.

One day, after my husband and I moved to Texas from Southern California in August 2023, a beautiful yellow butterfly was in my daughter’s yard, just sitting on her window screen, its wings opening and closing almost as if it were welcoming me to Texas.

Finally, I was able to sit outside every evening and watch the trees and the leaves bustle with the cicadas’ buzzing.

I’ve always appreciated nature, and to have it right in my own backyard is so comforting.

I believe that nature nurtures. If we slow down and really take a look, there is so much beauty to behold.

Just last week, I saw a monarch butterfly hanging out in our new yard. I went outside and took a photo and welcomed it. The following day, I went to the local nursery and bought a milkweed plant in the hopes that the monarch would lay its eggs.

Summer will be here soon, and I’m excited to hear the cicadas once again. ■

This Necklace is NOT for Sale ... It's yours for FREE

No kidding. Only Stauer can give you 200 carats of genuine amethyst for NOTHING.

You may think you understood the concept of "priceless" jewelry. For years, "priceless" meant "astronomically expensive." That is, until now ...

Stauer smashes the luxury status quo with the release of our FREE* 200-Carat Lusso Amethyst Necklace. That's right, we said FREE ... as in "priceless." No charge.* ZERO dollars.* Call now and we'll send you this impressive helping of genuine amethyst (independently appraised at $295) for FREE. We cut the price 100%.
